Miguel Ángel Muñoz, an actor 'made in Spain' is making a film with Sharon Stone and Andy García

The actor from Madrid, of 29 years of age, stars in the movie What about love, which also features José Coronado.

Miguel Ángel Muñoz is another promising young actor in Spanish cinema. The actor, of 29 years of age, had a big success with the Spanish series Un paso adelante, and afterwards he took off for Mexico to star in the TV dramas Infames and Capadocia, and now he has taken a big step, and has shot a film with cinema legends, Sharon Stone and Andy García, which also features José Coronado.

The movie is called What About Love, and is directed by Klaus Menzel. It is a coproduction among Spain, Germany, Romania and United States, which will arrive on the big screen in September 2013. Muñoz plays a young man who takes a trip together with Tanner Tarlton, played by Marielle Jaffe (Scream 4). Both suffer a tragic accident that will change the life of the parents of the young woman, played by Sharon Stone and Andy García, whose relationship winds up on the rocks. This is when José Coronado (father of Miguel Ángel Muñoz) enters the picture, who will have a very special romantic relationship together with the star of Basic instinct.

This movie is a love story, which attempts to “enter through the retina and reach the heart”, which has been filmed in places such as Venice, Barcelona, Tossa de Mar, Hamburg and Washington D.C. “I am very happy to be here and to be able to make this trip. Everything that has happened to us is unbelievable, we have really given it our best, and it is still not over. And in my case, I would be happy if it were never over because it has been a long time that I haven’t has such an intense experience with a project”, indicated Miguel Ángel Muñoz while shooting part of the film in Tossa de Mar.
